- Description & Purpose -

Approximately 10,000 people turn 65 years old every day. As the population ages, the number of individuals requiring assistance is increasing. A report indicates that self-neglect in the aging population is the most common form of non-financial elder abuse/neglect. Many professionals are reporting that this type of abuse is a largely hidden problem, with most cases going unreported. This seminar will address how to identify self-neglect in older adults. Using both general and local case studies, this seminar will focus how to identify self-neglect, resources available to individuals in our community, and strategies to address needs of our aging population.

- Target Audience -

Social workers, medical staff, home health, adult day care, long term care or geriatric units, private, professional or personal caregivers, counselors, academia and concerned citizens.

- Objectives -

As a result of this workshop, participants will be able to:

- Define and describe the dynamics of self-neglect
- Identify key indicators of self-neglect in older adults
- Assess the indicators that make someone more likely to self-neglect
- Identify practical strategies to work with and support older adults
- Describe the importance of collaboration with key stakeholders to prevent the self-neglect in our aging population

We are grateful for the financial support of the NC Regional Long Term Care Ombudsman Program Elder Abuse Funds.
